

At around 12 45 pm on 9th July 2010, I was travelling to by train to Sydney.

Busses were being used on some parts of the trip due to track work.

I had just boarded the train at Waterfall and dozed off right away. When I awoke (around the Heathcote/Engadine area), I saw (200 – 300 metres away) a light shining on the bushes and trees along the railway fence. I thought to myself that the sun was shining in an unusual way on the bushes.

However, as the train approached the place where the light was, there appeared in the light four very large men. They were each clothed in a white one piece suit (something like overalls), with a wide grey belt (or sash).

One of the men was definitely looking directly at the railway track while the others were standing watching.

I saw these men for 4-5 seconds, and then they faded away, although I still saw the light until it was out of my field of vision.

I had firstly thought that the belts were black, but it was somehow shown to me that they were a lighter colour and of a translucent fabric (something like terylene or nylon).

I see the 'men' as being Angels guarding the railway tracks which at that time were being upgraded.

Josie Ingram